TEXT

Every day around the world, tragedies occur that are entirely avoidable : siblings burying siblings, spouses burying spouses, children burying parents - all of them dying before their time. What is the leading cause of these preventable deaths ? Is it tuberculosis ? AIDS ? Malaria ? Each receives a great deal of media coverage along with hundreds of millions of dollars in funding – and rightly so. But there is another deadly epidemic that kills more people than all three diseases combined, and until recently, it received almost no public attention : tobacco use.

Tobacco has become the world's leading cause of death. How many deaths are we talking about ? It is roughly estimated that many people – 14,000 – die every single day from smoking tobacco. If we do nothing, tobacco may kill one billion people by the end of this century.

In partnership with the World Health Organization, we have developed a strategy called MPOWER, which includes six solutions that have been proved to save lives :

. Monitor tobacco use and prevention policies : to determine the effectiveness of our efforts, it is essential to monitor which countries adopt which policies – and how those policies affect smoking rate.

. Protect people from secondhand smoke : smoke-free environments are the only proven way to protect people.

. Offer to help people quit : most smokers want to quit but find it hard to stop. Counselling and medicines can triple success rate.

. Warn about the dangers of tobacco : despite clear scientific evidence, relatively few tobacco users fully appreciate the extent of the health risk. Together with hard - hitting campaigns, large graphic warnings on cigarette packs help smokers quit.

. Enforce bans on tobacco advertising, promotion and sponsorship.

. Raise taxes on tobacco : this is the most effective single way to reduce smoking particularly among the young.
